When It Goes Wrong

The Impact on Lack of Partnership Working

“These dreadful living conditions were known to the Landlord of the property and it appears efforts were made to engage with the deceased and her son to try to and deal with the problem. However it is abundantly apparent that little or no progress had been made in this regard and the property was a significant risk not only to the occupants, but also to neighbours & members of the emergency services, such as fire fighters who might have to enter the property. I take note that hoarding is now becoming better publicized and indeed it is now the subject of television programmes. There seems to be a lack of appreciation of the enormous risk that such as hoarding poses to occupants, neighbours and members of the emergency services. It is very likely that had there been earlier more effective intervention, Mrs Bradshaw would not have died.”
